PUBLIC LECTURES

I speak to a number of groups every year as part of my commitment to meeting people's interest in history, both within and beyond the academic realm.

I am happy to consider requests to speak in person, with acceptance based on such factors as my other commitments, the organization requesting a presentation, and the location of the event.

Public lectures available at this time include:

The Arts and Crafts Movement

Rebuilding London Churches after the Fire and after the Blitz

Toronto Church Architecture, 1793-1893

The Greatest Art Fraud of the Twentieth Century

Haudenosaunee (Iroquois) Material Culture, 1700-1815

Mohawk Chief John Norton and the Indigenous Great Lakes, 1780s-1820s

The Ohio War, the Toronto Passage, and the Birth of Urban Toronto, 1786-1796

Land Warfare in the Great Lakes Region, 1775-1840

Toronto on a Dangerous Frontier, 1793-1841

The War of 1812: The Big Picture

In addition, I have spoken on various themes in museology, heritage restoration, and material culture, and can tailor presentations when asked to do so for academic or other specialized audiences, but usually have to limit lectures for historical societies and similar public groups to the titles listed above.
