

Female Migrant Entrepreneurship Research

Abstract

Migrants foster innovation and economic development in host nations through their entrepreneurial activities. Female migrant entrepreneurship is gaining more attention from the research community, with several studies being conducted in the field. This paper presents a standalone (scoping) systematic literature review of academic literature related to female migrant entrepreneurship and focus on their entrepreneurial experiences, strategies, outcomes, resources, and context. For this purpose, 13 articles published in research journals are studied based on their (a) objective (b) research methods. Based on the review, several gaps in the literature were identified, and suggestions were made to fill the gaps in future research to expand the scientific knowledge on female migrant entrepreneurship.

Keywords: female migrant entrepreneurship; systematic literature review; female migrant entrepreneurship outcomes; female migrant entrepreneurship experiences; female migrant entrepreneurship strategies

Biography of Author

Dike Ike is a first year PhD student in the Ted Rogers School of Management, and his primarily research interest is immigrant entrepreneurship and sustainability entrepreneurship. Prior to joining Ryerson University, Dike worked as a manager in operations in several top multinational companies. Dike holds a B.Eng, and M.Eng degrees and has authored/co-authored over twenty highly cited publications in international journals and conferences.