

A new theory of immigrant entrepreneurship

Abstract

Immigrant entrepreneurship is an important socio-economic phenomenon and has been identified as a promising concept to drive economic activity in host nations. Several theoretical frameworks have been applied in the study of immigrant entrepreneurship in the literature. This paper proposes a new theory of immigrant entrepreneurship with the aim of expanding the scientific knowledge of immigrant entrepreneurship literature.

Biography

Dike Ike is a second year PhD management student at Ryerson university. His research interest is in the area of sustainable immigrant and transnational entrepreneurship. His research explores the entrepreneurship process of Nigerian immigrants in Canada involved in transnational sustainable businesses.